

Introduction

Telemedicine is the delivery of healthcare services through the use of technology when the healthcare provider and patient are not in the same physical location. Providers may include primary care practitioners, specialists, and/or subspecialists. Electronically transmitted information may be used for diagnosis, therapy, follow-up, and/or patient education, and may include any of the following:

- Patient medical records
- Medical images
- Interactive audio, video and/or data communications
- Output data from medical devices and sound and video files

The interactive electronic systems used will incorporate network and software security protocols to protect the confidentiality of patient identification and imaging data and will include measures to safeguard the data and to ensure its integrity against intentional or unintentional corruptions

Potential Benefits

- Improved access to medical care by enabling a patient to remain in his/her physician's office (or at a remote site) while the physician obtains test results and consults with healthcare practitioners at distant/other sites
- Obtaining the expertise of a distant specialist

Potential Risks

As with any medical procedure, there are potential risks associated with the use of telemedicine. These risks include, but may not be limited to:

- Information transmitted may not be sufficient (e.g., poor resolution of images) to allow for appropriate medical decision making by the physician
- The consulting physician(s) are not able to provide medical treatment to the patient through the use of telemedicine equipment nor provide for or arrange for any emergency care that I may require
- Delays in medical evaluation and treatment could occur due to deficiencies or failures of the equipment
- Security protocols could fail, causing a breach of privacy of personal medical information
- A lack of access to complete medical records may result in adverse drug interactions or allergic reactions or other medical judgment error

By signing this form, I understand and agree to the following:

- The laws that protect the privacy and confidentiality of medical information also apply to telemedicine. No information obtained during a telemedicine encounter which identifies me will be disclosed to researchers or other entities without my consent
- I have the right to withhold or withdraw my consent to the use of telemedicine during the course of my care at any time. I understand that my withdrawal of consent will not affect any future care or treatment, nor will it subject me to the risk of loss or withdrawal of any health benefit to which I am otherwise entitled.
- I have the right to inspect all information obtained and recorded during the course of a telemedicine interaction and may receive copies of this information for a reasonable fee.
- A variety of alternative methods of medical care may be available to me, and I may choose one or more of these at any time. My physician has explained the alternative care methods to my satisfaction.
- Telemedicine may involve electronic communication of my personal medical information to other medical practitioners who may be located in other areas, including out-of-state.
- I may expect the anticipated benefits from the use of telemedicine in my care, but that no results can be guaranteed or assured. My condition may not be cured or improved, and in some cases, may get worse.
- I understand that billing will occur by my doctor and, in the case of an electronic consultation, can from an additional doctor
